

Food, warm clothing and blankets, modest cash-for-work programs and shelter materials reached victims of the October 8 earthquake in Jammu and Kashmir within a few days and are continuing as part of a $600,000 U.S. government relief program channeled through local and international humanitarian organizations. Save the Children was among the first to distribute emergency relief, provided with the help of the American people, as shown in these pictures. Right: Children in the village of Bandi, in the hills outside the border town of Uri, received warm jackets. Below: Indian families in the hardest hit areas were given rice, dal, oil, and salt. The United States Agency for International Development's Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance has contributed $180,000 to Save the Children; $170,000 to Catholic Relief Services, including $43,000 to India's Confederation of Voluntary Associations; $100,000 each to CARE and World Vision, and $50,000 to the Prime Minister's National Relief Fund.
